A Paris telegram, dated Thursday, states:

The Inspector of Police at Cholet (Maine et Loire) has sent a report to the President of the courtmartial which is investigating charges against a man named Krien of communicating with the enemy. The report establishes that Krien was an accessory in German outrages and ill-treatment. He denounced to the Germans the Princess of Croy at Bellegmy, near the Belgian frontier, accusing her of assisting the escape of Frenchmen, and abe was sentenced to a term of hard labour. He also obtained admission to Miss Edit Cavell's hospital in Brussels, and there contributed by his acts in bringing about her arrest.

The draft was discussed yesterday at the willing to grant any reasonable demands that the men might make. The vast ence, and Lord Robert Cecil's speech shows ence, and Lord Robert Cecil's speech shows third public sitting of the Peace Conference, and Lord Robert Cecil's speech shows that it is only provisional. It was understood that M. Bourgeois would make certain reservations in the name of the French Government, while signifying its move unanimous, the draft Furthermore, even if the Peace Conference is now unanimous, the draft must run the gauntlet of public opinion in all the Allied countries. It will be submitted to jealous scrutiny in the Parliaments of London, Paris, Rome, and Tokio. President Wilson will sail to-morrow for the United States, and the draft will come before the new Congress which he will open at the beginning of next month. Curiously enough, it is likely to meet with rougher treatment in the country where the inspiration of the League of Nations was been than in any capital of Europe. The Republican Party is preparing a formidable indictment of Mr. Wilson on the grounds that he has violated the prince of the pressure put on them by the pickets. "fourteen points" exist simply "to perplex our Allies and to cheat them of the full fruits of their victory." The Republican Party will have majorities in both Houses of the new Congress. All these facts must discourage us from giving a premature welcome to the League of Nations.

The draft of the Covenant is written in the direct and plain language of the new diplomacy. The world's democracies will have no difficulty in appreciating its tremendous import. It unfolds a scheme which embodies all civilisation's ideas for perfect government by moral principles, and it seeks to apply that scheme to all the peoples of the world. The strike leaders declared that the proposal must be accepted by all employers, and their exhortations to this effect certainly influenced the men who voted. Although the result of the ballot is disappointing, it presents at least one hopeful feature—that the men are by no means unanimous in the desire to continue the strike. Those who are in favour of a resumption of work have clearly been against the methods by which the strike is being conducted. This force is increased.

The public will welcome heartily the announcement by the Food Controller that the control of the sincerity of her intension to be bound by the League's principles and practices. Such guarantees must be given by all States that seek to join the League, and there is a further condition about "full self-government" which is likely to brighten the monotony of political controversy on the Irish question. Members of the League must signed to reduce their armaments to the lowest-point "consistent with national safety." That point will be decided by the Executive Council, whose verdict, it seems, will be final. An interesting light is thrown upon what may have been in the mind of Austria when the ultimatum was put to Austria. "Putting together the Irish crisis, the Gaillaux trial, and the long-continued Petrograd riots," remarks the Professor, "some observers said that the precise moment of the launching of the Austrian ultimatum had been chosen with skill. To face war abroad during a desperate crisis at home requires a strong mind. If these were the hopes of Austria, they were soon to be disappointed. Remove this obstacle and the roau to Rule is cleared.

That Home Rule, of some sort, is the unconscious objective of Lord Midleton's followers the experience of the last eighteen months has convinced the great majority of Irish Unionists. The absurdity, however, of coupling "Unionists" to "Anti-Partition," under the circumstances, should be obvious to anyone who takes an intelligent interest in the matter.—Yours, etc.,
